THE Kobe Herald of the 12th has the folboat was cut in two in the herbour by the S.S. Omi-maru. Captain Brown states that the wind was blowing fresh when he left his anchorage for the pier. On passing the Fatshan he found the Bengloe coming in, and in order to allow her to pass his stern he had to go full spead shead. The Benglos could not slow down or the wind would drive her ashore. Just ahead were several fishing boots, with a net spread out over half a mile. Captain Brown had the choice of two unpleasant alternatives-to collide with the Bengloe or to run down a fishing boat, and chose the latter and lesser evil. Directly the Bengloe passed under his stern he went full speed astern, but his ship had so much way on that it went clean through the fishing boat, though the Omi stopped in time to prevent the nets entangling her propeller. The accident was inevitable, but was due to the temerity of the fishermen laying down their nets in the fairway.--

The Tameni correspondent of the N.-C. Daily News writes :- A very severe typhoon passed the north and of Formesa on the 6th and 7th instant. According to what we could make out, it came up on the east side of the island and crossed over north of it towards the mainland, the centre passing perhaps some 30 to 40 miles off. It travel led very slowly, and took ample time to do all the mischief on its way it could. Kelung the water rose some 5 feet over highwater mark; the centre passed there at 0.30 p.m. on the 6th with the barometer registering 28,57. Not so very much damage was done there; the ships, e.s. Smith, Kristina Nelsson, Claro Babuyan and a Chinese gunboat, got through without other loss than that the two sailing ships each lost an anchor, which they afterwards recovered. The dredger broke adrift and landed on a ledge of rock just at the place where a wharf most likely will be made when Formess wakes up a future generation, and a small steam launch attached to it has disappeared. A any loss of life except up in the gold fields, lot of small mishaps occurred, but hardly where the sudden swelling of the little stream drowned nearly, 200, according to. what is reported. The centre passed north of Tamsui about midnight 6-7th, with a barometer reading of 28.70. Much more damage was done here, and the rise of the water was considerably more. The river also roso, and as the holding ground in Tameui is exceedingly bad, a lot of junks lowing :- On Saturday morning a fishing were wrecked, and many of them are high. and dry up in the fields now. Many people are said to be drowned.

On the railway line the worst damage between Kelung and Taipel Fu is the collapse of a large wooden bridge, spanning the Kelung river at Bathun, where the foundation was washed away. Besides that a couple of small bridges are damaged. They will, bowever, soon be in working order, and the intention is to run from both ends to the river and cross i ferry boats until the bridge is put up again. The line to the south of Taipen Fu has not been much damaged, and the long wooden bridge across the broad river by Twatutia stood the test well. The telegraph lines are down all over, and we have no connection as yet from one place to another. Hansen went out in the s.s. The consequence is the odd jumble prove of the utmost utility from a military to Ezra in 3443, and extended 483 such point of view.

This document is in the Emperor' hands. Besides that he collected all the articles written in favor of the project, either by his own creatures, such as Captain Honegor, or by writers like Major Hentzs, and these documents were submitted to William in the hope that their perusal might change his views. In all this matter Caprivi received every assistance from the Minister of War, who blindly executed the Chancellor's orders. for this Minister is really nothing more than a secretary. On the other hand Count Schliffen of the general staff refused to support the Chancellor in the matter. As regards the probability of Canrivi's resignation it must be borne in mind that the Chancellor is both obstinate and ambitious and will keep the reins in his hands as long as possible. At present he is occupied in arranging terms of alliance between the right and the centre, and at the same time he is making game of angry Progressionists, who gave him such valuable support at the outset.

The subjects of this inquiry, in almost every instance, decline to give any information about themselves. The Chinese Consul has also refused assistance and information requested of him by General Kerwin, Collector of Iuternal Revenue in this city.

The Celestials have already held one meeting at which the law was roundly denounced, and another has been called for the same purpose. They have apparently planned to act in concert in defying-the new regulation. It is anticipated that the Chinese will test the constitutionality of the registry law.
